FAS proposes to unify the procedure for considering tariff disputes

The Federal Antimonopoly Service (FAS) proposes to change the procedure for challenging decisions of regional authorities on setting or changing tariffs, transferring such cases from courts of general jurisdiction to the competence of arbitration courts. This procedure now applies to disputes based on decisions and orders of the antimonopoly service itself. The FAS explains the need for changes by the lack of a unified procedure for considering tariff disputes, which sometimes leads to the impossibility of revising inflated utility tariffs.
