As a result of extraordinary indexation of tariffs the index of payments for housing and communal services in 16 largest cities of Russia increased to 9%

According to the IPEM study, as a result of extraordinary indexation of tariffs for housing and communal services, the average weighted base index of payments for housing and communal services in the 16 largest cities of Russia increased to 9%, or almost doubled compared to the July tariff campaign, and the average increase in payments for all housing and communal services calculated by IPEM - up to 7.3% against 5.5% in July. However, due to the outstripping growth of nominal incomes of the population in 2022, the tariff burden on the part of housing and communal services decreased in all the cities under study.
