Chernyshenko's office denied plans to include payment for smart meters in the bill for housing and communal services

The office of Deputy Prime Minister Dmitry Chernyshenko said that the installation of smart meters will not entail an increase in payments for housing and communal services.

"The development of a system of smart metering devices is designed to increase the penetration of artificial intelligence into the housing and communal services sector (now only 6% of companies in this sector are implementing it) and provide a significant economic effect, including for citizens," the press release says.
