Putin signed a law tightening the requirements for protection of fuel and energy facilities

Russian President Vladimir Putin signed a law toughening the requirements for the protection of fuel and energy complex (FEC) facilities to increase their security, including anti-terrorist ones. The document is published on the official portal of legal information. The law clarifies who has the right to protect fuel and energy facilities of high and medium hazard categories, and tightens the requirements for private security organizations. At the same time, it is prohibited to allow persons who provided false documents when hiring, as well as foreign citizens and stateless persons to guard fuel and energy facilities.
