The first group of power engineers was trained to work with Profotek digital instrument transformers

The first group of power engineers was trained to work with digital instrument transformers of the RUSNANO portfolio company - Profotek. Today in Russia, as in other countries, the process of digitalization of the energy sector is actively underway. One of its elements is the introduction of digital measuring instruments in the grid complex. They allow to ensure the reliability of the power system and increase the accuracy of electricity metering.
