The Ministry of Energy sees two years of technological "backlog" from industrialists and energy

The Russian industry has at least two years of "backlog" to ensure import substitution in the energy sector, said Deputy Energy Minister Yevgeny Grabchak. According to Deputy Minister, the Russian power industry and the grid complex, in particular, "turned out to be the most ready for the trends to ban exports to our country." "We can say that without a doubt the situation that has developed will not affect the functioning of the electric power industry," he concluded.
